

I am a loyal K-Love listener, and know that many of my friends and family listen to this radio station as well. I prefer this station over the other local stations, because it offers positive messages, and music I am not embarrassed if my children sing these lyrics back to someone.

With the local DJ's encouraging listeners to act out certain improper scenarios and the language they are allowed to use, I do not feel comfortable with my children listening. Most song lyrics these days are very sexually graphic, or violent, which I believe is very detrimental to our younger generation.

It would be a tragic mistake to force this station off the air. Diversity is something that is talked about a lot, but unfortunately, not something practiced toward Christian music.

If K-Love were not a station that was wanted, then it wouldn't be supported by their listeners for as long as it has, or would be growing to reach new listeners. It is on the air because people want it on the air and they are willing to pay for it. This should speak volumes to you.
